In the bottom picture, taken in the 1940's. The I-65 cut, from right to left in this picture would be just above the old barn wreckage and going between the horse and the cows. I believe that it is Bee behind the horse and Bud in middle right...but am not sure. In this black and white photo the trees in the background are the ones in the color photo. The trees in between were removed for the interstate. The left hand animal is just off, to the right, of an old drive.
